ChamberFest DUBLIN
19 April - 2 May 2021
Collaboration is one of the most important aspects of a musician’s life. Our chamber music partners offer us different perspectives that challenge us, feed our creativity and inspire us to form united visions. In this past year of global pandemic, in-person musical interaction has been one of the biggest losses to our musical lives. With the immense energy, adaptability and commitment of our students and chamber music coaches, chamber music activity at RIAM has continued.

ChamberFest Dublin 2021 features almost 40 chamber music groups in 15 concerts streamed from the Royal Irish Academy of Music, National Gallery of Ireland, Museum of Literature Ireland and St Stephen’s Church “The Pepper Canister”. Highlights include works by 6 female composers, a historical performance research event and a chamber music masterclass with RIAM faculty Christopher Marwood from the Vanbrugh Quartet. The festival culminates in a performance by RIAM’s exploratory group, Ensemble Interforma.

The programming of ChamberFest Dublin is a collaborative process, with students forming their own chamber music groups, researching and choosing repertoire under the mentorship of their coaches. ‘Impressions from Bohemia’ presents works by Dvořák and Smetana, including a version of Smetana’s Piano Trio with double bass replacing the cello, arranged by final year bachelor’s bassist, Alex Felle.

‘Visions and Dreams’ features a group of “dream songs” chosen by the musicians, and movements from Messiaen’s powerful Visions de l’Amen performed by Rachel O’Hara and Laoise McMullin under the guidance of their coach, Thérèse Fahy, who gave the Irish premiere of the work in 1990.

The rise of recorded performance has been of incredible value to the arts, yet there is no substitute for the experience and excitement of performing live. 12 of the 15 concerts will be livestreamed, interspersed with backstage mini-interviews to allow audiences to feel closer to the performers, while also serving a practical function of allowing cleaning and ventilation between performances.

ChamberFest Dublin could not take place without an enormous amount of work that goes on behind the scenes. Our fantastic team at RIAM has worked tirelessly with a problem-solving determination to allow music making and chamber music performance at RIAM to continue. In addition, we are hugely grateful to an anonymous donor for supporting ChamberFest Dublin 2021, and to The John Pollard Foundation and the National Gallery of Ireland for supporting the performance by Ensemble Interforma. It is with huge pleasure that we present such an exciting, collaboratively produced two-week chamber music festival to audiences joining us from their homes.

Ensemble Interforma
Sarah Sew, director

J Strauss II arr Brett Dean: Die Fledermaus
Jennifer Walshe: Zussamen i
Stravinsky: Concerto in E flat (Dumbarton Oaks)
Anna Clyne: Within Her Arms
Ensemble Interforma is made up of a core 15 players of flexible instrumentation, with artistic leadership from violinist, Sarah Sew. The group focuses not on the individual, but on the group as a collective, looking outward at open collaboration, crossing boundaries and art form. The group explores repertoire from all periods, focusing on works that compel, provoke and inspire.

Tonight’s concert, entitled “Re:Form”, is based on an organic approach to re-forming traditional ensembles combined with a future looking reform of “traditional” ideals of instrumentation. The programme features 4 works with an equal male:female composer ratio. Johann Strauss II's orchestral overture to Die Fledermaus is transformed into a chamber music work in Brett Dean’s reduction for the same instrumentation as Schubert’s iconic Octet in F. Stravinsky uses the spirit of Bach's Brandenburg Concertos for his modern-day concerto grosso, Dumbarton Oaks. Ensemble Interforma is delighted to work directly with composer, Jennifer Walshe, and stage director, Tom Creed, on Zusammen i, scored for a group of 10 performers without specified instruments. The concert finishes with Anna Clyne’s, Within Her Arms. The work democratises the traditional string orchestra — rather than more upper voices tiering down to less lower voices, the instrumentation is egalitarian with equal numbers of first violins, second violins, violas, cellos and basses.

First and foremost, a good arrangement can open a work to a different and wider audience. Editing in the reduction from large to small enables performances with much less effort and much simpler means. The famous arrangements in the Schönberg-Kreis (Association for Private Musical Performances, Vienna, 1918-22) are still the best examples of this and are among my favourite arrangements, especially "Das Lied der Waldtaube" from Schönberg’s Gurrelieder, arranged for mezzo-soprano and small ensemble. Such arrangements have certainly made this music audible and tangible for many more people (in a time without recordings and radio broadcasts) and cast an interesting light on the "chamber music" of even great symphonic works such as Mahler’s symphonies, even if they certainly reach their tonal limits.

Since my student days, I’ve always learned a lot from working on other pieces. Not only about the instrumentation but also about the form and architecture of the music. A lecturer at the Conservatory in Brisbane (where I studied) always encouraged me to do this, with the words, “Always remember, when you arrange a work, the original becomes part of one’s own piece”. You fully immerse yourself in someone else’s way of thinking and composing. As far as “confronting” or “flattering” is concerned, it is particularly important to me that one should always remain “true” to the spirit of the original. Interestingly, I originally included a few small musical “gags” in my Strauss arrangement (e.g. short, unprepared quotations from other well-known pieces). In the end, however, it worked much better without this, ie “straight”.

Brett Dean

I played Bach very regularly during the composition of the concerto and I was greatly attracted to the Brandenburg Concertos. Whether or not the first theme of my first movement is a conscious borrowing from the third of the Brandenburg set, however, I do not know. What I can say is that Bach would most certainly have been delighted to loan it to me; to borrow in this way was exactly the sort of thing he liked to do.

Igor Stravinsky

Within Her Arms is music for my mother, with all my love.
Earth will keep you tight within her arms dear one—
So that tomorrow you will be transformed into flowers—
This flower smiling quietly in this morning field—
This morning you will weep no more dear one—
For we have gone through too deep a night.
This morning, yes, this morning,
I kneel down on the green grass—
And I notice your presence.
Flowers, that speak to me in silence.
The message of love and understanding has indeed come.
—Thich Nhat Hanh

Anna Clyne
ChamberFest Dublin Prize 2021

The Royal Irish Academy of Music is delighted to announce an exciting new chamber music prize. One of the groups participating in the 2021 iteration of ChamberFest Dublin will be offered a concert engagement at the Hugh Lane Gallery as part of its prestigious Sundays@Noon series. The concert will be recorded and broadcast, with additional documentary footage and radio interview, in collaboration with Near FM and a fee of €1000 will be extended to the selected group for their performance at Sundays@Noon. All chamber music groups performing at ChamberFest Dublin 2021 will be considered and selection for the final round will be made by the Head of Chamber Music in consultation with external chamber music examiners. Selected groups will be announced on Friday 30 April and invited to compete in the Final, which will be held on Wednesday 5 May 2021 in the RIAM Organ Room.

ChamberFest Dublin Prize 2021 is presented in partnership with Sundays@Noon at the Hugh Lane Gallery.
